Issue 81 - Editor: Tom Tweedy

EDITORIAL: Well, not much to write about this time - everyone in Falcon failed to send in orders - tsk! I'm quite busy at the moment anyway. My Dalmatian bitch has just delivered 7 puppies which just at the age - 4 weeks - of being wheened are driving me/the household crazy at the moment. Jan's had hardly any sleep - getting up and down in the middle of the night. She frets worse than Tiffin actually. Also, there's the problem of vetting who we're going to sell them to (we don't just sell them to anyone don't you know!). Of course I'm up to my neck in kack and do-dah every time Jan asks my opinion about a possible buyer. I mean, husbands aren't supposed to have opinions for god sake! I fell into that trap a couple of times before I finally realised I was wrong if I liked them, and wrong if I didn't. All I do when she asks me dog related questions now is look up blankly from the computer and mutter something about 'isn't it lunchtime yet?' She understands blankness and worries about the next mealtime. Apparently that's what husbands do best.

Well, I'm off now to worry about the next meal.

DULL WILLIAM - RED LEMMING Personally I think the holes in your fuselage are very attractive, and I'd like to see more of them. ((Yes I believe the fashionable effect is called filigree.))

DULL WILLIAM - LUTON AIRPORT I'm trying to help, but the rotter just won't stand still and be hit. Incidentally, is this an appropriate time to point out that RED LEMMING is an anagram of LED GROM MEN. Or is Jed Stone really a Nom de Guerre for Nigel Diemm? ((You think Nigel Diemm is a war name? Why just add an 'I' and you get Jedi Stone - now that is a war name.))

RED LEMMING - DULL WILLIAM At least you've not shot holes in my parachute. I'm going down one way or another. Pity you can't find the time to join me. ((Er, I hate to mention this Jed, but they didn't have parachutes in the WWI - I think you'll find that's a backpack we've issued you.))

RED LEMMING - LUTON AIRPORT I'm fast running out of choices here! Are there any rules about ramming? ((Actually there is - you can't. Being on the same hex you're considered to be above and below each other. Sorry about that.))
